On the second full day of this conference the focus is on Building specific partnerships between public libraries and schools... What can significantly improve the situation for the children and young people at school age?

What possibilities and obstacles for cooperation can we identify when we are building partnerships to create accessible content, collections, and presentations? Can we find clever ways to work with libraries/schools; how can we share knowledge on successful methods? What models are there so that programmes and services to children can be streamlined? Can we think of children and young people as end users of our services?

It all boils down to inclusive thinking from the beginning and keeping this inclusive line of thinking alive, during the whole process of preparing programmes and services to all users in the libraries and schools who may benefit from it.
